The US	• DXY dropped to 103.208 , -1.06% wow. After 30-31 July meeting, Fed officials decided to keep rate unchanged at 5.25% - 5.5% per annum as inflation cooling down and labor market "coming into better balance". At post-meeting press conference, Fed's Powell implied a rate cut in September as long as no surprise economic readings in the next 6 weeks. On Friday, nonfarm payrolls grew by just 114,000 in July, below the downwardly revised 179,000 in June and economists' estimate of 175,000, while unemployment rate edged higher to 4.3%, up from 4.1% in June. Given unexpectedly weak labor data, market is currently pricing two 50-bp rate cuts in September and November FOMC meeting.
Eurozone	• EUR/USD closed at 1.0908 last Friday, + 0.47% wow . GDP in 2Q increased by 0.3%, beating consensus 0.2% in both the Eurozone and the EU. The headline and core HICP inflation were 2.6% and 2.9% yoy (higher than the forecast of 2.5% and 2.8%, respectively). Services inflation, whose stickiness has raised some concerns on the downtrend of inflation, slid to 4% yoy in July from 4.1% in June, which reaffirmed market expectation of another 25-bp rate cut in September.
The UK	• GBP/USD ended last week at 1.2798 , -0.57% wow. GBP's downtrend halted following BoE decision to cut rate 25bps in August meeting. This is the first rate-cut since March 2020. BoE also projected that inflation shall reach 2.75% at the end of 2024 and approach 2% in the early 2026.
Japan	• JPY rose +4.67% against USD and closed at 146.54. Yen kept appreciated against the USD following the decision of BoJ to raise rates from 0-0.1% p.a to 0.25% p.a. In the meantime, BoJ also outlined roadmap for trimming bond buying program. The fact that BOJ cutting rate prior to GDP reading in 2Q hinted at BoJ's priority of the stability of JPY and inflation control over the impact of rate hike on growth path.
China	• USD/CNY down -1.24% and ended last week at 7.16. This week, Caixin PMI reported at 49.8, lower than market projection at 51.4 point, implying a weakness in production. Hence, the markets are waiting for more stimulus after slight rate cuts from PBoC last week.
